WELCOME TO THE FUTURE OF LEGAL SERVICE

Welcome to the 7th annual VQ Knowledge and Strategy Forum at the Grand Hôtel in Stockholm on Tuesday 18 October 2016.

VQ Forum brings together thought leaders and champions of change in the legal profession to discuss strategy and key developments in the legal market. During the day you will gain interesting, practical and visionary insights from internationally renowned speakers, as well as great networking opportunities with your fellow peers.

The theme for the 2016 event is reinvention and disruptive innovation.

The impact of the current technological advances and the need for innovation and business development to prepare for the potential disruption of the legal market will be explored, with case studies and examples of successful reinventions in practice.

Special focus will be given to in-house innovation versus law firm services and the need for both companies and law firms to adapt to the new digital legal future.

Learn also about the new blockchain technology and how it will drive the development further with smart contracts and support for automated processes.

Welcome Remarks

Welcome by Ann Björk, Co-founder, Virtual Intelligence VQ, and opening remarks by moderator Patricia Shaughnessy, Director of the Master of International Commercial Arbitration Law Program, Stockholm University.

Block 1 – Disruption in the Legal Sector?

Disruptive Patterns affecting Different Business Models

How does the digital economy affect established industries? What challenges do established firms encounter when a mature, well consolidated industry is subjected to disruptive innovation?

Dr. Christian Sandström is associate professor in Disruptive Innovation at Chalmers University of Technology and the Ratio Institute. Based on his own research concerning technological change and the challenges they present for established firms, he will describe disruptive patterns and associated problems.

The potential for a digital disruption in the legal sector will be discussed with comparisons to the Kodak Moments and the Collapse of Nokia.

In-house Innovation vs Law Firm Services

Håkan Broman, General Counsel and Executive Vice President, NCC Group, will share his view on in-house innovation versus law firm services and the importance of proactivity. He will take the client perspective on legal services and discuss issues such as lack of scalability and the need for both companies and law firms to adapt to the new digital legal future.

Ideally, law firms should provide more proactive services, such as the development of models to prevent the arising of legal problems, rather than offering reactive services when problems have already arisen. With such new innovative models, law firm services could be more scalable and profitable, while clients would receive significantly more value from the services.

In-house Innovations Changing the Legal Market

Max Hübner, General Counsel, PGGM N.V, will share his experience how transformational change in providing legal services can be achieved.

In the 2013 FT Innovative Lawyers Report he and his legal team at PGGM N.V. were ranked as most innovative in operational change in-house for overhauling the approach to external spend and the significant cost savings achieved through encouraging high performance from the team through smart management, cutting costs and making the legal department one of the most respected in the company.

Max Hübner has for more than twenty years contributed on legal matters in the field of law enforcement, governance, environment, housing and spatial planning and financial markets and early introduced new concepts for legal services and pricing. Already in 1999 he introduced document assembly and legal work flow management.

Based on his failures and successes Max Hübner developed an approach for the transformation of legal departments. By introducing this approach in the public and private domain he proved that change can be made. By now it saved the pension funds quite some millions.

Impacts of the Changing Legal Profession

The legal profession is by tradition based on personal relations and trust, and typically the client-lawyer relationship has lasted over a long period of time. This is now changing, due to new ways of procuring and structuring legal services.

Peter Danowsky, Partner, Danowsky & Partners, will discuss the integrity of the lawyer when the scope of the client matter is reduced due to specialisation, digital development with standardisation, automation and overall efficiency.

Panel Discussion: Different Perspectives on Disruption

Paula Röttorp, Managing Partner at the Stockholm office of Hannes Snellman, will provide a short introduction to the changing legal marketplace and how it is affected by the current digitalization.

Dr. Christian Sandström will then continue by addressing different perspectives on digitalization and disruption with a panel of legal professionals. How does digital technology affect the legal market? What challenges and opportunities are currently facing legal practitioners? Will there be a potential disruption of the legal market or can legal services transform into a new business model to meet the new digital reality? How can we adapt to the current trends, while yet preserve the typical client-lawyer relationship based on personal relations and trust?

Panelists include Dr. Christian Sandström, Associate Professor, Chalmers University of Technology and the Ratio Institute, Håkan Broman, General Counsel and Executive Vice President, NCC Group, Max Hübner, General Counsel, PGGM N.V, Peter Danowsky, Partner, Danowsky & Partners, and Paula Röttorp, Managing Partner, Hannes Snellman.

The panel will address the aspects of digitalization and disruption from their different perspectives; from a forward-focus to a more traditional approach, from an in-house counsel to a legal service provider perspective, and from both an international and a local point of view.

War For Talent

Zarina Virsholm, Partner and Co-founder of Sharp Recruitment, will share her insights on the need for consolidating and streamlining the recruitment process in law firms by using a systemized, digital method that facilitates control over talent drain from law firms and personnel costs at large.

Block 2 – New Possibilities with Blockchain Technology

Blockchain Technology and Smart Contracts

Learn about the new blockchain technology and why this technology will matter to legal services providers, to their clients, to intermediaries and to regulators.

Gerard Neiditsch, Research Associate, St. Gallen University, will provide an introduction to blockchain and smart contracts and how it enables a third kind of party to transactions. He will explain the business drivers for blockchain projects and how the technology enables disruptive innovation by entirely new business models, user experiences and cost structures.

Furthermore, Gerard Neiditsch will analyse whether the disruption of the role of banks, stock exchanges etc. as intermediaries of transactions will affect the role and need for lawyers in the financial sector, or if lawyers will be compensated by other types of legal work, e.g. regulatory and dispute regulations of automated transactions. He will also explain more about how the smart contracts technology can support and change internal processes such as anti-money-laundering processes.

Gerard Neiditsch has for more than two decades been working in applying innovative technology and leading large-scale work practice changes at first tier legal, advisory, and accounting firms. He is currently researching the impact of new technologies on the professional services sector.

Smart Contracts and Blockchain for the Process of Selling a House

Henrik Hjelte, CEO and Co-founder, ChromaWay, will provide a particularly current practical example, where The Swedish Land Registry will be using smart contracts and blockchain technology for the process of selling a house. With the use of the new technology, The Swedish Land Registry, aims for a disruption of the real estate market and the process of selling and buying houses. All steps in the process will be replaced by a new automated platform that allows for digitizing and representing workflows in a secure, private and efficient way.

Henrik Hjelte is the CEO of ChromaWay, the company built from the world's first Bitcoin 2.0 implementation in 2012. He has been developing software professionally since the 80's.

Panel Discussion: Blockchain and the Legal Market

Gerard Neiditsch, Research Associate, St. Gallen University, will address different perspectives on blockchain and digitalization with a panel of legal professionals. Discussions will focus on the impacts of the new blockchain technology on the legal market.

How will digitalization transform the organization of the clients? How will legal service providers need to adapt to the client's changes and the changing nature and volume of legal work? How will intermediaries be impacted when blockchain and smart contracts technology decrease the need for central authorities? How will the decrease of work in the finance sector affect the role and need for lawyers? Will lawyers be compensated by the increased need for regulatory and dispute regulation of automated transactions and the increased anti-money laundering and 'know your customer' crime prevention provisions? Will the technology even foster new types of legal jobs, e.g. smart contract engineers with a mix of technology, legal and management skills? And how will the legal market be affected by the connected trends including Artificial Intelligence and Machine Learning, big data analytics, smart devices, and virtual reality and advanced collaboration technologies?

Panellists include Gerard Neiditsch, Research Associate, St. Gallen University, Henrik Hjelte, CEO and Co-founder, ChromaWay, and Jonas Jeppsson, Chief Legal Officer at Widespace AB, an innovative mobile advertising expert company.

Streamlining the In-house Legal Department

Ylva Lindquist, Vice President & General Counsel, EMEIA, Xylem Inc, will speak about the use of technology to improve and streamline the in-house legal department. She will share her experience from Xylem's legal strategy work and how the in-house department has changed its way of working in practice by implementing systematized processes, prioritizing legal strategies in the context of business outcomes and using digital tools to support systematization and increase efficiency as well as cost effectiveness.

Xylem Inc, is a leading global water technology company listed on the New York Stock Exchange, with operations in more than 150 countries with annual revenue of approx. USD 4 billion and 12,500 employees. Ylva Lindquist heads the EMEIA Legal team supporting all Xylem entities in Europe, Middle East, India and Africa. She also heads the Ethics and Compliance Review Board for EMEIA as well as the Anti-Corruption Oversight Committee for EMEIA.

Unleashing Innovation in a Global Organization

Rachel Manser, Global Head of Knowledge & Learning at Linklaters, will provide a case study in innovation. She will explain the framework for sparking innovation and how to unleash the imagination of the lawyers to challenge the present and shape the future. She will share the story behind some of the firm's specific initiatives and reflect on the challenges of change in a global organization.

Rachel Manser has been involved in central K&L since 2009, and in 2015 she was appointed Global Head of Knowledge & Learning. She is responsible for the firm's professional development and learning technologies teams and the K&L offerings to clients.
